

Karden is located 40 km away from Koblenz at the lower course of the Moselle. Without any doubt Karden deserves its reputation as the most important site between Koblenz and Trier with regard to culture and history.

At first glance the visitor is struck by the view of the imposing building of St. Castor, the ancient collegiate church which is still dominating the village centre.

The museum building itself represents a historical monument. It was built in 1238 as a part of the collegiate district. In former times it was mainly used as a tithe barn.

This was the place to store the goods which the collegiate received as contributions from their parishes.

The windows of the upper floors are particularly remarkable. Arch windows alternate with clover and round arches that have been restored to their original state of splendid colours.

The collegiate museum displays items illustrating the importance of Karden going back thousands of years. In the past Karden used to be the religious centre of the archdiocese of Trier.

Celtic-Roman Division

In the first century before Christ, in the Celtic time, there was a sanctuary on the Martberg situated between Pommern and Karden, where the Celtic tribe of the Treverer worshipped their main god Lenus. In Roman times a large temple district was established there. A great number of pilgrims flocked to the Martberg in the hope of being relieved from their illnesses. At the site of the present village of Karden the Romans had established the street village Cardena. In a large pottery district goods were manufactured which the believers, according to their religious faith, dedicated to their god as votive offerings.

The Collegiate Church St. Castor

The religious importance and function of Karden even survived the transition to Christianity and the changes involved with the new religious ideas. In the 4th century Saint Castor lived and worked there. He contributed largely to the establishment of this pilgrimage place.

Since the late 9th century Karden has been the seat of one of five administration districts belonging to the archdiocese of Trier. The collegiate church of Karden had been existing for almost 1000 years when it was abolished by Napoleon in 1802. The head of the collegiate at Karden was simultaneously the canonical bishop of a district that stretched from Andernach to Bacharach in the east and from Wittlich to Traben-Trarbach in the west. At the end of the 18th century 10 courts and 53 towns and villages had to pay the tithe to the collegiate.

Martberg hill, about 180 metres above the river Moselle between Pommern and Karden, was the location of a fortified town-like Celtic settlement. The centre of the settlement, known as an oppidum by the Romans, became the site of a Gallo-Roman temple, a visible reminder of the tumultuous history of the Celts and the Romans in the Moselle region. This temple was a shrine to Lenus Mars, the Roman god after whom Martberg hill was named. In its heyday, around 200 AD, this ritual site was home to numerous temples. Thanks to many years of excavation, parts of the temple complex have now been restored. Guided tours of the complex and the main temple with its wall paintings are available throughout the year.

Archaeological finds – including weapons, jewellery and thousands of Celtic and Roman coins – provide an insight into the ritual activities that took place some 2,000 years ago. Individual items are on display in the Museum of Religious History in Karden.

Numerous information boards are found in the temple complex and along the Lenus-Mars-Trail. They tell you all about the reconstructions and archaeological research of the Celtic oppidum and the fortifications.

The Lenus-Mars-Trail

The 5.1 km Lenus Mars Trail links the villages of Karden and Pommern. Information boards on route tell you everything you need to know about the excavations and settlements at the temple complex.

A map of the route can be found on the information boards in Karden (at the end of the street called 'Unter den Weinbergen') and in Pommern ('Am Goldberg').

The marked trail can be used all year round. Sturdy footwear is recommended.

You can learn all about the excavation site and the archaeological finds in an exhibition in the Bürgerhaus 'Am Spilles' and on the Internet on www.martberg-pommern.de.

Martberg-Café

The Martberg-Café offers (during the opening hours of the main temple) delicious coffee, homemade cakes, regional wine and other specialities.

Arrival

Starting from Pommern there is a road leading to the Martberg. When you follow the signs you will easily find the parking area next to the top.
